

Singapore's international community includes a large proportion of expatriate families from countries with strong classical music traditions, including Germany, France, the United Kingdom, South Korea, China, and many others. Many of these families arrive in Singapore already engaged in serious violin study and are looking for a music shop and academy that can support their child's progress to the same standard they were receiving at home. LVL Music Academy's team of European, Russian, and local teachers, combined <https://www.pexels.com/@loretta-porter-2162572798/> with Alan Senejani's luthier expertise, makes it one of the most suitable establishments in Singapore for expatriate families with high musical expectations. The academy's international outlook is reflected in its annual overseas music exchange programme and its preparation of students for international examinations and competitions. For expatriate families who are bringing a quality violin with them to Singapore, LVL's luthier service is an important first port of call. An instrument that has been in transit or storage may need adjustment for the change in climate, and Alan can assess and address any issues that arise from the move.
