Questions That Tell You More Than A Quote Ever Will

The right questions make a contractor show their process, not hide behind a low number.

It also helps to ask how they handle common local issues, such as foundation movement, old frames out of square, or heat-related seal failure.

If you are comparing bids, do not focus only on the final number.

The better approach is to compare scope, materials, labor, warranty terms, and the contractor's willingness to explain each line item.
