

When a violin needs repair or restoration in Singapore, the quality of the luthier makes all the difference. LVL Music Academy's head luthier, Alan Senejani, brings a rare combination of formal engineering training and deep passion for stringed instrument craftsmanship to every repair project he undertakes. Alan's workshop at LVL handles the full spectrum of violin repairs: from routine maintenance such as bridge fitting, soundpost adjustment, and peg replacement, through to complex restoration work on antique instruments that have suffered cracks, open seams, varnish damage, or structural deterioration. His engineering background allows him to approach complex structural problems with precision and an innovative mindset, finding elegant solutions to challenges that would defeat a less technically minded craftsman. Customers who have brought damaged violins to Alan consistently describe the experience as exceptional. Reviews mention his patience in explaining the repair process, his honesty about what is and is not worth fixing, and the quality of the finished work. One customer described how Alan restored a violin that had been neglected for years, returning it to a condition where it looked and sounded amazing.
