What is Workers Compensation?

It's designed to protect both parties: it ensures that workers receive necessary care without having to prove fault, while employers are protected from lawsuits related to workplace injuries.

Why Employers Need Workers Compensation Insurance

Most states require employers to carry workers compensation insurance. This not only safeguards injured employees but also helps businesses manage financial risks associated with work-related injuries. When employers fail to obtain this insurance, they expose themselves—and their employees—to significant legal and financial liabilities.
